The changing law and culture of privacy in the wired age

Come think out loud about how our views of privacy are evolving — for better or worse — as wired culture becomes the norm.

Traditional views of privacy stress being left alone, whereas social networking sites and other aspects of internet culture stress getting connected and revealing personal information. Who knows what? Who can access and control the information we willingly provide? What are the implications of these changes for us as individuals, and for our society?

Join in a lively and thought-provoking conversation with a panel of people in the front line of privacy concerns:

- First Amendment legal expert and specialist in emerging technology Frederick S. Lane (author of The Decency Wars: The Campaign to Cleanse American Culture)
- UVM sociology professor Thomas Streeter (specialist in media, technology, law, and culture)
- UVM graduate student Matt Shagam (specializing in Internet media and social trends)
- ACLU Executive Director Allen Gilbert
