RE: Brattleboro's Begging Ordinance, Sec.13-2, and Unlawful Enforcement Policy
Against Peaceful Panhandlers

Dear Mr. Elwell:

We write with respect to Brattleboro's "Begging" Ordinance Sec. 11-708 (the "Ordinance") and the police department's anti-panhandling policy and practices. Since the landmark Reed v. Gilbert case in 2015, every panhandling or begging ordinance challenged in federal court – at 25 of 25 to date – including many with features similar to the ones in Brattleboro ("the Town"), has been found constitutionally deficient. See Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Ariz., 135 S. Ct. 2218 (2015); see, e.g. Norton v. City of Springfield, Ill., 806 F.3d 411 (7th Cir. 2015); Thayer v. City of Worcester, 755 F.3d 60 (1st Cir. 2014), vacated, 135 S. Ct. 2887 (2015), declaring ordinance unconstitutional on remand, 2015 WL 6872450, at *15 (D. Mass. Nov. 9, 2015)); see also National Law Center on Homelessness and Poverty, HOUSING NOT HANDCUFFS: A LITIGATION MANUAL (2017), <https://www.nlchp.org/documents/Housing-Not-Handcuffs-Litigation-Manual>. At least 31 additional cities, including Vermont's own City of Burlington, have repealed their panhandling ordinances when informed of the likely infringement on First Amendment rights. The Town's ordinance not only almost certainly violates the constitutional right to free speech protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, it is also bad policy, and numerous examples of better alternatives now exist which the Town could draw on. We call on the Town to immediately repeal the Ordinance, end any enforcement practices related to it, and instead consider more constructive alternatives or risk potential litigation.

The First Amendment protects peaceful requests for charity in a public place. See, e.g., United States v. Kokinda, 497 U.S. 720, 725 (1990) ("Solicitation is a recognized form of speech protected by the First Amendment."). The government's authority to regulate such public speech is exceedingly restricted, "[c]onsistent with the traditionally open character of public streets and sidewalks" McCullen v.

Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2529 (2014) (quotation omitted). As discussed below, the Ordinance is well outside the scope of permissible government regulation

The Ordinance overtly distinguishes between types of speech based on “subject matter . . . function or purpose.” See Reed, 135 S.Ct. at 2227 (internal citations, quotations, and alterations omitted); see, e.g., Norton, 806 F.3d at 412-13 (“Any law distinguishing one kind of speech from another by reference to its meaning now requires a compelling justification.”). The Ordinance explicitly bans any person from begging or soliciting “in or upon a street or other public place withing the town.” The Ordinance is short and overly broad. It bans an entire category of speech in any and all public places.

In addition, according to public records, Brattleboro’s Police Department is operating under an unconstitutional policy that targets panhandlers for arrests, tickets, and citations for their protected speech. BPD’s policy appears to envision that any panhandler can be “removed” under the Begging ordinance. Physical removal would constitute an arrest and telling a person to “move along” would be an unconstitutional act designed to chill protected speech. More troubling is that BPD’s leaders seem to believe that individuals cannot lawfully ask someone for money with a sign or gesture, or walk behind them while asking for money.

Because the Town and its police department have made overly broad subject matter-based distinctions for “begging,” the Ordinance and the BPD enforcement policy are “content-based” restrictions on speech—presumptively unconstitutional, unless the Town can show they are narrowly tailored to satisfy a compelling justification. See Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Ariz., 135 S. Ct. 2218, 2232 (2015); Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469 (2009). Courts use the most stringent standard – strict scrutiny – to review such restrictions. See, e.g., Reed, 135 S. Ct. at 2227 (holding that content-based laws may only survive strict scrutiny if “the government proves that they are narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest”); McCullen v. Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2534 (2014). The Ordinance and enforcement policy cannot survive strict scrutiny because they neither serve a compelling state interest, nor are they narrowly tailored.

First, the Ordinance and enforcement policy serve no compelling state interest. Distaste for a certain type of speech, or a certain type of speaker, is not even a legitimate state interest, let alone a compelling one. Shielding unwilling listeners from messages disfavored by the state is likewise not a permissible state interest. As the Supreme Court explained, the fact that a listener on a sidewalk cannot “turn the page, change the channel, or leave the Web site” to avoid hearing an uncomfortable message is “a virtue, not a vice.” McCullen v. Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2529 (2014); R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, Minn., 505 U.S. 377, 386 (1992) (“The government may not regulate use based on hostility—or favoritism—towards the underlying message expressed.”).

Second, even if the Town could identify a compelling state interest, there is no evidence to demonstrate that the Ordinance is “narrowly tailored” to such an interest. Theoretical discussion is not enough: “the burden of proving narrow tailoring requires the County to prove that it actually tried other methods to address the problem.” Reynolds v. Middleton, 779 F.3d 222, 231 (4th Cir. 2015). The Town may not “[take] a sledgehammer to a problem that can and should be solved with a scalpel.” Browne v. City of Grand Junction, 136 F. Supp. 3d 1276, 1294 (D. Colo. 2015) (holding ordinance restricting time, place, and manner of panhandling was unconstitutional).

Though “public safety” is an important state interest, the Ordinance and evidenced enforcement policy are not narrowly tailored to serve that interest. See Browne v. City of Grand Junction, 136 F. Supp. 3d 1276 (D. Colo. 2015) (rejecting claims that the ordinance served public safety as unsupported and implausible); Cutting v. City of Portland, 802 F.3d 79 (1st Cir. 2015) (requiring evidence to substantiate claims of public safety). The Town’s ordinance and enforcement policy ban all kind of speech and expressions that cannot be deemed a risk to public safety. Even written and unspoken requests for charity are banned under the Ordinance. And, under the BPD’s enforcement policy, just this year, individuals have been repeatedly admonished and “moved along” for the simple act of verbally asking others for money. Such acts are not a public safety concern, but admonishing such speech does unconstitutionally chill protected expression. As a result, the Ordinance and its current enforcement cannot be plausibly said to further public safety.

Courts have not hesitated to strike regulations that regulate the manner in which a person can ask for a charitable donation, even where the regulation was supposedly justified by a state interest in public safety. And for good reason: restricting people’s behavior on account of their speech is almost always too over-reaching to be narrowly tailored to any compelling governmental interest. See, e.g., Clatterbuck v. City of Charlottesville, 92 F. Supp. 3d 478 (W.D. Va. 2015); Thayer v. City of Worcester, 144 F. Supp. 3d 218, 233 (D. Mass. 2015) (striking down provisions against blocking path and following a person after they gave a negative response); McLaughlin v. City of Lowell, 140 F. Supp. 3d 177, 189 (D. Mass. 2015); Browne v. City of Grand Junction, Colorado, 2015 WL 5728755, at *12-13 (D. Colo. Sept. 30, 2015) (“[T]he Court does not believe[] that a repeated request for money or other thing of value necessarily threatens public safety.”). For these reasons, among others, the Ordinance and current enforcement policy cannot pass constitutional muster.

Even more specific ordinances that ban requests for charity within an identified geographic area or through a certain manner have been found unconstitutional. See, e.g., Norton v. City of Springfield, 806 F.3d 411, 413 (7th Cir. 2015); Cutting v. City of Portland, Maine, 802 F.3d 79 (1st Cir. 2015); Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City of Redondo Beach, 657 F.3d 936, 949 (9th Cir.

2011) (en banc); Thayer v. City of Worcester, 144 F. Supp. 3d 218, 237 (D. Mass. 2015) (“[M]unicipalities must go back to the drafting board and craft solutions which recognize an individuals . . . rights under the First Amendment”); McLaughlin v. City of Lowell, 140 F. Supp. 3d 177, 189 (D. Mass. 2015); Browne v. City of Grand Junction, Colorado, 2015 WL 5728755, at *13 (D. Colo. Sept. 30, 2015); Cross v. City of Sarasota, No. 15-CV-02364 (M.D. Fla. June 21, 2017)

Further, the anti-panhandling ordinance and enforcement measures are simply unnecessary bad policy. Harassing individuals and chilling their requests for help in a time of need is inhumane and counterproductive. Unlawful anti-panhandling ordinances such as Brattleboro’s ordinance and enforcement policy are costly to enforce and only exacerbate problems associated with homelessness and poverty. Numerous communities have created alternatives that are more effective, and leave all involved—homeless and non-homeless residents, businesses, town agencies, and elected officials—happier in the long run. See National Law Center on Homelessness and Poverty, HOUSING NOT HANDCUFFS: THE CRIMINALIZATION OF HOMELESSNESS IN U.S. CITIES (2016), <https://www.nlchp.org/documents/Housing-Not-Handcuffs>.

For example, Philadelphia, PA recently greatly reduced the number of homeless persons asking for change in a downtown subway station by donating an abandoned section of the station to a service provider for use as a day shelter. See Nina Feldman, Expanded Hub of Hope homeless center opening under Suburban Station, WHYY (Jan. 30, 2018) <https://whyy.org/articles/expanded-hub-hope-homeless-center-opening-suburban-station/>. Creatively, cities and towns can actually solve the problem of homelessness, rather than merely addressing its symptoms through criminalization or “move alongs.” Vermont cities and towns can repeal anti-panhandling ordinances and take similar positive steps. Burlington recently repealed its “aggressive panhandling” ordinance because of concerns about its constitutionality.

We can all agree that we would like to see a Brattleboro where homeless and poor people are not forced to beg on the streets. But whether examined from a legal, policy, fiscal, or moral standpoint, criminalizing any aspect of panhandling is not the best way to get to this goal. The Town should place an immediate moratorium on enforcement against panhandling, proceed with a rapid repeal of the Ordinance to avoid potential litigation, and then develop approaches that will lead to the best outcomes for all the residents of Brattleboro, housed and unhoused alike. In the event the Town does not repeal this unconstitutional law, we will seek out impacted individuals to represent in legal action, at which time we will seek injunctive relief and attorney’s fees as authorized by 42 U.S.C. § 1988.
